BOY DIES IN BURNING HOME

Taunted in Bedroom as Fire Sweeps Dwelling in Cleveland Suburb.

By The Associated Press
CLEVELAND, March 18.—Thirteen-year-old William Hirt was burned to death in a fire which destroyed the home of his grandfather, D. W. Strong, in Willowick, a suburb, early today.

The boy, trapped in a second floor bedroom as he slept, was unable to make his way through the smoke and flames which prevented him from entering the house.

Two firemen suffered minor burns in trying to rescue them through the black smoke and a daughter, Mrs. Shanks, is aged in safety.

Chief John Kelly of the Willowick fire department said the flames probably were caused from an oil burner defective wiring. Damage was estimated at $4,000.

Motion Picture Actress Solves Talkie Problem

HOLLYWOOD—Lillian Gish has turned out to be an inventor or rather an improvisor. She has solved a problem that worried sound engineers ever since talking pictures were born.

It is the matter of beds clattering against the floor as the players walk about during the shooting of sound film. The sensitive microphones magnify the simple clanking of the beds into torrent of sound.

It remained for Miss Gish to suggest the simple device of pasting strips of felt to the bottoms of the beds and poles, too, for that matter, thus eliminating another annoying source of extraneous sounds in talkies.

Nature never made a mistake—not even when women was created.

A STORY OF LOVE AND LIFE IN HOLLYWOOD

BY SIDNEY HERSCHEL SMALL

INSTALLMENT 23
Craig scribbled in glasses. "At least I used to say 'twas a client's word he had been interested in. It was a young man, I did say it was a good example to set before us—'simply,' it might be a risky business."

"...as long as people are thirsty, it's to be foisted."

"I grant that the children are drinking do not know what's between whisky and water."

colored alcohol, but there are some of us left."

The chemist, making a final note of Craig's recommendations, nodded politely, and said, "Just as long as you drink whatever you're requesting in your glass, sir, you can't go wrong, but—"

Craig, unlocking a drawer of his desk, pulled out a brightly labeled square bottle. If a man's on the alert," he said, "he can sometimes pick up authentic whisky, and not at a prohibitive price. I'll just ask ye to smell this, Mr. Caldwell, and tell me if you can identify the perfume."

Caldwell snuffed at the quarter full bottle, and then poured a bit of the liquid, pale, odorless, into the palm of his hand. He waited a moment while the fluid warmed, and then put it again to his nose. "Yes," he said at last, "I wasn't sure if that was Merriam-Michalek's essence—they're Canadian chemists, sir, and a deal of the 'whisky' made across the border is manufactured pretty much along boozier lines. I've been told—but I believe it's our own: we specialize in it."

"Ye dabbles so much with fakes that ye can't tell the genuine," Craig told him shrewdly. "This whisky came from—"

"The cellar of some gentlemen who needs money."

"Ha! And how'd ye know?"

"One of our customers, who sells only in small lots and at high prices, uses that method. He tells me it's very successful. If you like this type of liquor, sir, we can give you all you want at about nine or ten dollars a gallon; that is, I can probably get all of the alcohol you want and flavor it for you . . ."

"Nine or ten . . . a gallon, Mr. Caldwell? You mean a quart, eh?"

Caldwell smiled sympathetically.

"No, a gallon. You see—"

The lawyer's thoughts were not exactly what Caldwell imagined: when he was alone, Craig said aloud, "Tis only being superstitious, but . . . poor John Andrew! And I toasted him with this selfsame liquor: what did I say? Ha, ha . . . May your fortune be as authentic as this whisky . . . poor John Andrew!"

On second thought he decided that the bright bottles might be sent to some of his friends as Christmas presents. "Wrapped in red paper, and with a sprig of holly 'round your neck, ye'll fool better judges than a sober attorney," he muttered.

"An impossible venture we sent the lad on," he was thinking. "What does he know of making money? Did he scratch like old Andy did? Not because he was brought up to a gentleman. Tis like sendin' a baby out into the world, and sayin', 'Here ye are; go see if ye can earn a living.'"

"John Andrew is in trouble, I do not doubt, and that will give old Andy no happiness if he knows about it above, and it gives me none here."

The attorney was so genuinely un-set that he poured himself a tumbler.

"It does not taste so 'very good,'" he thought, "but a man must admit it warms the belly." And then, "If I'd kept my tongue from waggin' when Caldwell was here, I'd not known the difference. John Andrew did poor lad. I wonder where he's at and what he's up to? Well, he can laugh at things, and that's a blessing . . ."

But John Andrew was not laughing. He was still in his room at the Pontefract and he was standing very erect, but he was not smiling at all. In the room with him were three others, the manager of the hotel and two men whom Kellogg had never seen before and never hoped to see again, although there appeared to be every indication that he would be forced to accost them to their company.

"I think you're using rather rotten judgment," Kellogg said to the manager. "I told you your bill would be paid today, and I meant it. Now if there's any way to avoid the money, I promise you I'll take every possible step."

"We have nothing to do with this, but—"

"They always talk big," the first of the strangers said to the manager. "He'll raise hell with you . . . yeah, a lot he'll do!" To Kellogg, "This takes more than bluff to get out of, fellow. Beatin' a hotel bill's probably nothing in your young life, but perhaps hangin' sends you up to the Point."

"Get an innocent look, ain't he?" the second officer grunted. "Like he's trying to say, 'I don't understand this terrible outrage; why, this is simply horrible, and what will my dear parents say?' Come along, guy: we're wastin' time."

John Andrew summoned his wife.

"Just a minute," he said, with no pleading in his voice, "you needn't fish your bodies again: I just know you wear em. The manager says that he hasn't anything to do with this. Who has? Can you arrest a man without informing him what you're doing?"

"You'll find out soon enough, if you don't know," he was told. "And don't get tough about it, either."

The manager, hopeful that the departure of the ex-guest would be made peaceably, and without any one noticing it, said platitudes. "I believe Mr. Kellogg is correct, deputy: you might just as well let him know—although naturally he already does—what the trouble is."

"Throw his junk into a suitcase, Jim, the larger deputy sheriff ordered. "The D. A.'s office'll want to go through it . . . so you don't know what it's all about, hub?"

"No, yet," said John Andrew.

No did he. Try as he might, he could see nothing which should have made him run afoul of the law—noting that he had ever done in his life. But the presence of authority, inscrutable, assured, at a time when he had neither dollars in pocket nor credit in bank, and when so much hinged upon the next few hours, was sufficient to make him hot and cold by turns.

"You know what a rubber check is, hub?"

Kellogg admitted truthfully, "I've seen them, yes."

"Well . . . isn't that enough to tip you off?"

Quietly, John Andrew mentioned the only matter which seemed even remotely connected with this warrant for his arrest. He said to the manager of the hotel, "You had a warrant issued because I wanted to cash a check here? I suggest that you wire my New York bank. You'll find the check was and is good, even if you didn't cash it for me!"

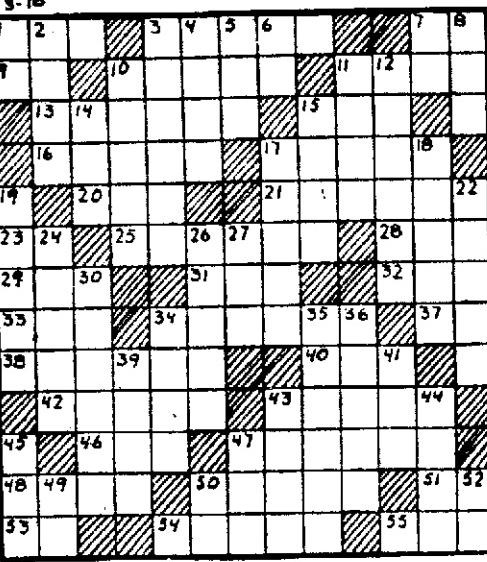

"It's a gift," the deputy in ebony song said to his mate. "To beat these guys talk you'd think that the presidents of banks knew 'em by their front names."

"I've had nothing to do with this," the manager said, speaking above the officer's voice. "These men from the sheriff's office inform me that they have a telegraphed warrant."

But John Andrew was not laugh-

DRIVER HANDED FINE, SENTENCE IN COURT

DRAWS $100 ASSESSMENT ON INTOXICATION CHARGE; ANOTHER GETS $50.

Leonard Davis, 30, of 550 Kenton av., was fined $100 this morning in municipal court on a charge of driving while intoxicated.

His driving rights were suspended for six months and he was placed under a suspended six-months workhouse sentence by Judge William R. Martin. Providing the $100 fine is not paid Davis will be obliged to work it out in the Dayton workhouse.

Yesterday morning Davis entered a plea of guilty in municipal court to a charge of driving while intoxicated. When arrested Saturday afternoon by police officers he was driving an empty truck on Locust ave. in a dizzy manner, police said.

Harry Baxter of Columbus, who last week smashed his State boxer sedan against a telephone pole in the southwest section of the city, successfully defended himself against a charge of driving while intoxicated when given a hearing in municipal court yesterday afternoon.

He did not however evide a charge of intoxication, which was placed against him shortly after the hearing. He pleaded not guilty to the charge but later changed his plea and was fined $50.

BY JIMMY CORCORAN
AVALON, Calif., March 18.—Biting cracked when the start of the Wrigley and as far off as the high winds from the east we can figure anything but another loss on the Chicago Cubs this season. You can rest in it out for two days if you wish before your day rate radiator.

The 1929 champs of the National League and champs of the world series should finish in notch No. 1 for the following obvious reasons:

1. The return to normal of Gabby Hartnett in fine form.

2. Better reserve pitching.

3. More power at third base where Leo Della Torre of the Braves has supplemented Norman McMillan.

4. Manager Joe McCarthy saves so well back that hand fate is face with anything that the seven other entries can produce. The Cubs of last season were strong enough to make into the world series without straining their little strings. They'll be a better ball club for the impending sweepstakes race that is in your spring derby.

Let the requiem about Hartnett's arm cease. He's right back now where he left off in 1928. He has been uncoupling those famous righty pegs like a man in spring skirmishes and unless he suffers some kind of relapse he'll be behind the avengers.

NORTH HIGH MEETS FAST FREMONT TEAM IN STATE TOURNEY

Columbus Five Won District Title Over Strong Contenders.

BY PATRICK MARK

Associated Press Sports Writer

COLUMBUS, March 18.—Students of North High here were last seen to the third, that Eric

Plake should pick up his share of the manager. He had his share in the last battle but he is not right now. His Carl

The young men who represent

Avalon for pitching are M. C.

Kansas City, Mal Moore from Ta-ville Al Shady from St. Paul, G.

nick from St. Paul.

Bud Trumbo, a pure base ball player, got away to a disad-vantage in the early spring, but now he must have a month's time, what Peacock didn't he is giving him plenty of time to get his bearings. Most another for older is McCarthy's boy for a working left hander.

Bob Johnson and V. T. Jackson batter who have bounded back to the Rivalry club will be given one consideration. Bill McAfee of Michigan has equipment but he is at least a year away from the big league.

Frank Grampi still remains the glutton as a hustling practice pitcher

but has hopes of regular employment

this season.

Danny Taylor the chappy who topped the International league in clothing last season with a mark of 367 is still muddling on the rim of midwest's row but while Stephen

Johns still has life, the kid has some thin Blue and Black will all the more hold that role.

The only even pea who appears to in full berth is first baseman Jim

Herman Jones, late of the Greenleaf

N. C. club Herman is only 20 and in his early workouts has convinced the folks that he won't be a Herman

Jones all his life. The kid has some thin Blue and Black will all the more hold that role.

I can say without kidding my self or the baseball public I state the McCarthy "we are all right repeat in '30. Our club is stronger. We'll have better reserve pitching. I hope you had to count on Georges and Neff. Now I'm afraid that some of the young bubs will be at it yet."
